SCOUTS HELP WITH PLANTING PROJECT

Members of Iowa Falls Boy Scout troop last Saturday assisted with work of planting large trees and wildlife refuge project at Dean Kelsey farm, about five miles southeast of Iowa Falls. Above pictures show two phases of work which resulted in planting of about 7,000 seedling pine trees and 8,000 multiflora rose bushes on about eight acres of reclaimed ground. Top picture shows Iowa Falls Boy Scouts at work planting seedling pines while Calvin Moore of Eldora, Soil Conservation Service representative, (facing camera at right) confers with Dean Kelsey (back to camera at extreme right). Lower picture shows William Moore (left), farmer living near Iowa Falls, and Chester Swift of Iowa Falls (seated, center) on seats of novel tree planting machine with water container behind them. Standing at right is Dean Kelsey and his three-year-old son, Charles Dean, is with him. Planting machine may be seen in operation in background of upper picture. Boy Scouts used project to work on conservation merit badges and were guests of the Kelsey's at lunch last Saturday. (Staff Photos)
