Vigil illuminates reality of drunken driving

CEDAR FALLS — One by one, they lit candles in memory of their loved ones who had died in alcohol-related crashes.

Monday night, about 25 survivors and supporters attended the first candlelight vigil sponsored by the Black Hawk County Chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers.

Porter

Some told their stories during the tearful ceremony at Bethlehem Lutheran Church. Others silently paid tribute.

Robin Swarts read a poem about her 15-year-old son, Doug, spending Christmas in heaven. He died in 1987.

William Porter of Hudson said his 4-year-old granddaughter, Rose Porter, was killed instantly when the car she was a passenger in slammed into a big oak tree in August. Two other teens also died. Porter said the three teens who survived the crash came to the funeral and apologized. The young girl who was driving drunk has to live with the guilt for the rest of her life.

"It's quite a burden for her to carry, and it isn't easy for grandparents, either," he said.

As Porter spoke, his wife, Marilyn, and daughter, Kim Briden of Waterloo, lit a candle at the altar, which displayed color portraits of the dead.

Rose Porter and her brother, Shannon, of Weaver, Minn., spent every summer with their grandparents in Hudson and attended elementary school for a year at Hudson Community School.

A candle flame was reflected in Sylvan Naber, left, of Cedar Falls, Jeremy Decker, 10, and Becky Decker, both of New Hartford, sat in a moment of silence during a MADD vigil Monday night. They were remembering Dennis Lee Naber, 39, and his son, Kyle, 9, of New Hartford. The two were killed in July by an allegedly drunken driver. Dennis was Sylvan's son and Becky's brother. Kyle and Jeremy were cousins and best buddies.

Steve Buck's glistening eyes as his mother, Shirley, returned to her pew after sharing the family's heart-breaking story. Terry Buck, who died in 1983, was younger brother to Steve and son to Shirley.

Mary Diehm told of the death of her 4-year-old daughter, S. Annemarie Buehne. She died in 1988.

The candles were lit in remembrance of loved ones and the hope that other deaths can be prevented.

Silent Night and other Christmas songs floated through the church

"one last time."

Buck supports the new MADD chapter. He said he's not against drinking alcohol.

New Hartford 4-H Club Wins National Award For Best Community Project

An Iowa State and 4-H Club organization has won a national award in the 18th annual search for the country's best community projects by young Americans. The Eager Beavers 4-H Club of New Hartford implemented a Christmas program to benefit the low-income and a scholarship in the memory of Dennis and Kyle Nabor. Dennis was a former Club Leader. The projects have won high honors in the "Colgate Youth For America" Campaign.

The announcement was made in New York by "Jeopardy's" Alex Trebek, teen star Chris Young and Grammy Award Winner Dionne Warwick, three of the members of this year's judging panel for the program established by Colgate-Palmolive Company in 1972 to encourage community responsibility in today's young people.

Group leader Terri Bertram said, "Our club decided to make Christmas special for a low-income family and contacted the Butler County Human Services who supplied us with a family. We purchased gifts and food for a complete Christmas dinner. The Scholarship was set up to aid a New Hartford senior furthering their education in an agricultural related field.

New Hartford Mayor Mike Luck proclaimed April 1991 Colgate Youth For American Month in New Hartford. The club plans to continue both projects.

U.S. clubs and troops of six major youth organizations: Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Boys Clubs, Girls Clubs, Camp Fire and 4-H are invited to enter their best community service projects in this annual Colgate campaign. Grants of up to $1,000 are awarded for the best projects in each of the organizations. The Eager Beavers 4-H Club was voted a $100 (4th prize) which will help continue the projects started by the club.

To date, Colgate-Palmolive Co. has awarded close to $5.5 million to America's young people through "Youth for America". The program has been honored by The White House, Congress, The Freedoms Foundation, more than 40 governors, and 2,000 mayors across the U.S.

In discussing this program, Reuben Mark, President, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Colgate-Palmolive Co., commented, "Our Youth for America program puts today's American youth in the spotlight for the contributions to their communities. The importance and quality of this year's projects demonstrate that our next generation is indeed committed to their country. The millions who have been helped by their impressive efforts would echo my feelings that the kids of the 90's are truly concerned."

Entry forms for the 1991-92 "Youth for America" campaign will be available this fall.

Leaders are: Terri Bertram, Steve and Becky Decker, and Darlys Hansen.

Nevenhoven didn't plan to stay at Aplington this long

By JIM SULLIVAN
Courier Sports Writer

APLINGTON — Duane Nevenhoven is a coach who's a 300 hitter — and still swinging.

Nevenhoven picked up career win No. 300 in his girls basketball career (counting seven years as a boys coach, he's just over 400 overall) when Aplington beat Gladbrook on Dec. 12. Since then, he's added two more to the victory pyramid, and a talented group of Pantherettes may just keep their coach climbing.

"We've got the ability to do some good things," said Nevenhoven, who's in his 17th season as Aplington's head girls coach. "Hopefully, we can find the desire and so on to make these kids the great team they really could be."

Over the years, Nevenhoven's had his share of talented teams. Since taking over the Aplington program in there are many fine coaches in the 400 and 500 range. I'm real happy to have 300, but there are a lot of other fine people who have done as well, if not better."

Ironically, Nevenhoven almost didn't arrive at that plateau. After five seasons at Steamboat Rock and two more at Aplington as a boys cage coach, he became an administrator and left athletics behind. Two years later, however, he returned to coaching, taking over the Aplington girls program in 1970-71.

"I FOUND that coaching hadn't left my bloodline," said Nevenhoven. And the coach hasn't left Aplington. The length of his tenure here, he said, was a little unexpected.

"Back in the early 1970's, I was thinking about going on to a larger school, or someday going back into administration," he said. "I'm sur-

Nevenhoven said.

Tall story

To hear Wellsburg's Kevin Ubellohde tell it, having five players 6-4 or taller on his boys basketball team is no big deal.

"Not at all," said the Warriors' head coach last week. "In fact, we've had to work pretty hard for the couple of wins we've got."

Perhaps, but Wellsburg is still off to a strong start. Its only loss came to Big Iowa Conference leader BCL-Union Whitten, and in what figures to be a tough race for the title, the Warriors could be a contender.

Certainly, the Warriors won't have to look up at anybody. The five tallest are all in the 6-4, 6-5 range; two of them (Lance Haupt and Lance Hansmann) are starting and Long trek ends for Panther faithful

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — The final score did not reward the season.

And for the most part, forget talk — at least for the moment — about “We’re just happy to be in the championship.”

“We didn’t come all this way to lose,” said Rick Burger of Cedar Falls. “We’d have stayed at home where it’s warm.”

Burger and friend Ron Schmadeke drove more hours than they cared to think about getting to Chattanooga. And now faced the prospect of an even longer return trip, psychologically anyway.

So they sat glumly in the stands at Finley Stadium.

“No place to go,” Burger said.

Their only entertainment after the University of Northern Iowa’s loss to Appalachian State was the opponents’ fans tearing up the field.

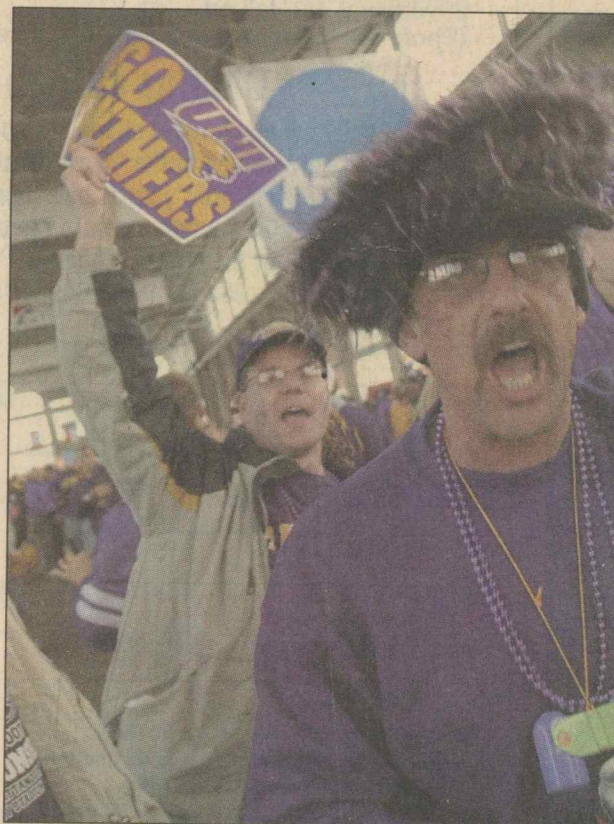

“It was a good game,” Schmadeke said.

“Next year,” Burger said.

He added a backhanded compliment a moment later.

“Here’s to Appy State — we found out today that they don’t like that name.”

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. — Fans soar when their teams are flying, fall hard when their champions stumble. Parents of football players know a particular kind of agony and ecstasy.

"I'm just astounded. The way the team came together," James Davis said. "I'm probably floating just as high as the kids right now."

The University of Northern Iowa is playing for the Division I-AA national championship tonight. Davis' son, Nick, is a member of special teams. Chattanooga, Tenn., is overrun with purple and gold.

"It's just hard to put it into words," Davis added.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

by Tammy Adams, Naturalist

According to Webster's Collegiate Dictionary a volunteer is someone who enters or offers themselves for a service of their own free will. The Black Hawk County Conservation Board (BHCCB) is fortunate to have many people who fit into this definition of volunteer.

When I think of volunteers one person comes to mind, Jim Newcomer. Since fall of 1991 Jim has been a Volunteer Trail Ranger. He monitors the portion of the Cedar Valley Nature Trail that is managed by the BHCCB. The trail has many types of users; hikers, bike riders, walkers, nature enthusiasts and those people who want to get outside for some fresh air. Motorized vehicles and horses are not allowed on the trail under normal circumstances.

" Being a volunteer, can be very hectic but rewarding, and many share the feeling with Jim Newcomer that it, 'makes you feel useful.' "

Jim wrote a letter requesting permission to use his four wheel All Terrain Vehicle (ATV) on the Cedar Valley Nature Trail. Jim's investment in the trail stems from his interest in the outdoors. The use of the ATV is because of a handicap attained during his service in the military. The BHCCB was willing to grant Jim access to the trail. They also asked him if he would serve as a volunteer trail ranger and check users for passes and sell passes.

Jim patrols a twenty-six mile stretch of trail starting in Evansdale and extending to Bear Creek at the Memorial Bridge just south of Brandon. The round trip takes about four hours total. He tries to complete this every day, Monday through Friday.

The use of the ATV is very beneficial to Jim but also for the users of the trail. Among some of Jim's duties are picking up trash, monitoring the safety of the trail, checking for washouts in the rainy season and for fallen or potentially hazardous trees. Jim is well supplied; on the trail he usually carries a thermos of water, a small air compressor, a first aid kit he put together himself, and a cellular phone.

Jim is a former employee of the US Defense Department, and was stationed at Chamberlain Manufacturing Corp. in Waterloo. When he retired he started repairing lawn mowers in his own garage, offering services to neighbors and family members. Some of Jim's other interests include metalworking, gardening, woodworking, with photography being among one of his favorites.

Jim is nothing less than a busy man, always occupying his time with something useful. Jim believes "You are better off health wise and mental wise if you keep busy." Being a volunteer, can be very hectic but rewarding, and many share the feeling with Jim Newcomer that it, "makes you feel useful."

We would like to extend a hearty thank you to Jim Newcomer for all he does on the Cedar Valley Nature Trail, on behalf of the BHCCB.

The Good Old Days

Having been born in 1920, my childhood coincided with the Great Depression. Without money, my main activities were things like rolling a hoop, wrestling with my brother, climbing trees, ice-skating and swimming in the creek. Then one day I helped a neighbor and got paid 35 cents. I sent for a complete camera and film developing kit, and for many years thereafter enjoyed the hobby of photography. When 14, I delivered the Des Moines Register, getting up at 5:00 O'clock each morning. I saved enough to buy a new bicycle which gave me more freedom. I also went in with a friend and bought a $12 wooden rowboat which we kept tied up in Black Hawk creek near his home. When about 18 and working at my brother-in-law's DX Station near the Electric Park, I had the opportunity to buy my first car, a 1928 Chevy Coupe for seven dollars. I couldn't have been happier had it been a Cadillac!

I went to Edison, Sloan Wallace and West High Schools, graduating in January 1939, and that same year got my first real job at Cutler Wholesale Hardware Co. While employed there I bought many quality hand tools at cost. I married Esther Reinhardt in 1941 while on vacation- we honeymooned in Missouri and Arkansas.

Shortly thereafter I was drafted into military service after getting a 6-month delay because of the impending birth of our first child in October. The next 18 months were spent training with the 103rd Division at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana. In June 1944 several of us were transferred overseas to the 82nd Airborne Division at their base camp near Leicester, England. Company G had suffered heavy casualties in the Normandy invasion and I was to be a replacement. My weapon was the Browning Automatic Rifle (BAR). In September we flew across the North Sea and landed the gliders behind enemy lines in Holland and a few days later, during heavy fighting to clear the entrenched German troops from the Kiekberg Woods, was slightly wounded by shrapnel. I healed in an English hospital and rejoined my outfit which had since relocated to a camp at Soissons, France.

Then in the middle of December the Germans broke through our sparse defenses in the Ardennes. The 82nd Airborne was moved north by trucks to try and contain the breakthrough, which became known as The Battle of the Bulge. While there, our squad leader and the second in command became casualties. Being next in line, I became squad leader. While advancing, we stopped for the night and dug 2-man shallow foxholes. Early next morning mortar fire started coming in and one round made a direct hit in my foxhole. Both legs were injured so that the left one had to be amputated and the right knee would no longer bend. After evacuation to the States, several months were spent in an amputation hospital at Temple, Texas. When it closed I was transferred to Percy Jones General Hospital at Battle Creek, Michigan where, in Nov 1946, received an Honorable Discharge with the rank of Corporal with the Bronze Star medal and a Purple Heart.

For about 3 years I repaired appliances at a Cedar Falls store. Then in June 1951 got a civilian position with Dept. of the Army as an inspector, assigned to Chamberlain Mfg. Corp. This was during the Korean War when lots of ammunition was needed and Chamberlain was a producer. After a year I agreed to be supervisor of the 3-shift operation employing 17 inspectors. A short while later we were transferred en masse to Defense Supply Agency and my title became SQAR (Supervisory Quality Assurance Representative). Then the organization was renamed Defense Logistics Agency.

For the next few years I attended 30 training courses and received many awards. The most prestigious award was when DLA started honoring their QARs in the field, and who were assigned to various contractors' facilities in a 10-state area. Out of a field of over 600 I was, in 1966, the first recipient of the Quality Assurance Representative of the Year Award. As a result, I was invited to a banquet at St. Louis. Pictures were taken of the presentation of the award, made by Army General Goshom and the district's Director, Colonel. Felch. Concurrently, I also received an Outstanding Performance Award.

To attend the many courses, I had the opportunity to travel to Chicago, Joliet, Philadelphia, Burlington, New Jersey, Baltimore and Edgewood, MD, as well as the administrative offices at St. Louis, Minneapolis, Rock Island and Cedar Rapids.

After 31 years, in 1978, I retired from Dept. of Defense. where I received the Distinguished Career Award from Major Winn of the Cedar Rapids Office.

Then after doing small engine repair for 10 years, I struck a deal with the Black Hawk County Conservation Board whereby I could fide my 4-wheeled All Terrain Vehicle on the 52 mile Cedar Valley Nature Trail. In return, I volunteered to check trail users to determine if they had purchased the required trail pass. If they had none, I would attempt to sell them one on the spot, thereby increasing the county's revenue. For 6 years, I enjoyed the great outdoors while policing the trail and observing animals and birds, photographing wild flowers, reporting fallen trees across the trail, etc.

For the last three years I have volunteered for duties at the Waterloo Senior Activity Center. Some of the jobs have been preparing mass mailings, printing labels from databases, teaching computer and genealogy, showing movies, helping with both the Meals-on-Wheels program and the Cedar Falls Senior Sports Classic.

My wife and I were awarded individual certificates for volunteerism by Governor Terry Branstad at a ceremony held at Eldora in June 1997.

For the 1998-1999 year I was selected for inclusion in Who's Who in the Midwest. Likewise, for 1999-2000 I have been selected for inclusion in the publication no's Who in America.

Volunteers keep many programs alive

A wise man will see to it that his acts always seem voluntary and not done by compulsion, however much he may be compelled by necessity. — Machiavelli, Discourses on Livy

Second in a series

By AMY DAVIS
Courier Staff Writer

All Jim Newcomer wanted was to travel the Cedar Valley Nature Trail.

He wanted to take in the foliage, smell the wildflowers and collect his thoughts along the secluded path that stretches 52 miles from Waterloo to Cedar Rapids. Yet only walking and bicycling are allowed on the trail — modes of transportation on which this 71-year-old Waterloo man can't rely.

"I can't ride a bike and I can't walk, so I can't enjoy the trail," he said, explaining that a World War II injury has kept him from walking independently without canes. His left leg is amputated at the knee and his right leg is permanently broken and immobilized in a brace.

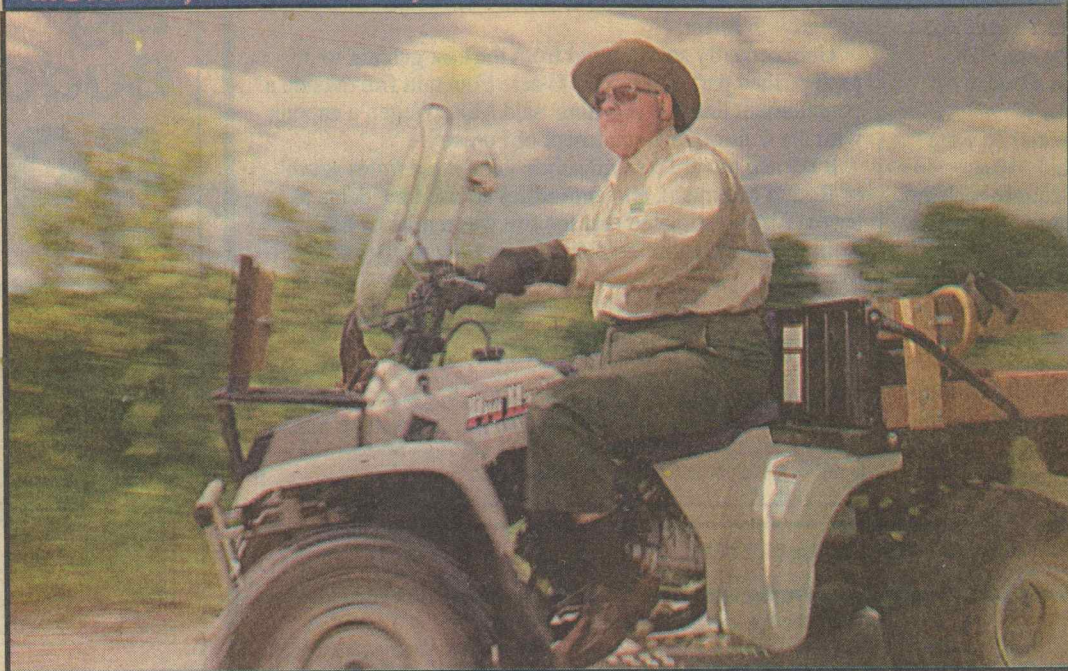

So he approached the Black Hawk County Conservation Board and asked permission to ride his four-wheel all-terrain vehicle on the path. What transpired was an agreement whereby Newcomer can ride there as long as he also patrols the path, checking to make sure users are carrying paid passes.

"They're kind of embarrassed if I catch them without the pass," he said. "I can't jail 'em. I can't kill 'em and bury 'em right there — all I can do is convince them why they should have one."

Newcomer doesn't receive a paycheck for his efforts or even reimbursement for his fuel and his drab green uniform. "This is all volunteer," he said. "The county doesn't pay a nickel."

He just gets to ride his four-wheeler on the path and that's enough for him, he said. Meanwhile, the county board earns a "worker"

Jim Newcomer motors along the Cedar Valley Nature Trail in search of delinquent users without trail passes. As part of his job as volunteer ranger, Newcomer also keeps a count of bikers and walkers on the trail and tells the county Conservation Board when the trail is in need of upkeep.

The agreement has paid off for both. Newcomer spends four days a week on the trail and the county has seen an increase in pass-generated revenue, especially since 23 other individuals (most of whom walk or ride bicycles along the trail) have followed Newcomer's lead and formed the Cedar Valley Trail Volunteer Corps.

"The number of people who have bought trail passes since the corps has begun has increased," said Bert Hallewas, administrative assistant for the conservation board. "It has brought in more income for the trail and that's certainly a good thing."

For Newcomer, his volunteerism was not sparked by an overwhelming desire to help out, but rather by personal necessity.

He is not alone. Public institutions, like city governments and schools, are relying more and more on volunteers. Officials say it's because, while taxpayers are demanding more and better public services, federal and state governments are cutting back on local aid to keep those programs going. Raising property taxes isn't really a solution, they added.

Senior Don Delamore took first place in local Special Olympics basketball skills competition at UNI and will compete next month in state competition in Iowa City.

Junior Toni Muters and senior Barb Howard placed second, and sophomore Andrea Armstrong placed third.

Teacher and coach Jim Seeley said, "This was a good experience for the kids. It gives them a chance to compete with kids on their own level."

The skills involved in the competition were dribbling, passing, rebounding and shooting. They were timed in 30-second intervals.

The four students have been practicing the skills for the last month and a half.

Seeley said, "We time the kids in practice and take down the scores. The scores are then aver-

All first place competitors will advance to the state competition March 14 in Iowa City.

Senior Interview 1989

Ann
Nicklaus

On June 7, 1971, a baby with face full of ambition was born to her proud parents, Justin and Karen Nicklaus. Now that she is part of the 1989 graduating class her ambitions are still strong.

Anastasia Marie Nicklaus, better known to all of us as Ann, is 17 and about to graduate. She has some memories that will last her a lifetime. As for her most memorable moment, it was when "Chris, Trina, and I won the student council election." Then, of course, that most embarrassing moment "When Bri and I got in trouble for toodling."

This lover of steak can be found listening to George Michael, INXS, the Escape Club, Phil Collins, Elton John and Howard Jones. Ann describes herself as unique because "I try to be nice to everyone." "My piano ability is unique and I have set high goals for myself." She has found God to be her favorite person because "He knows all and still forgives."

Ann's advice to underclassmen is "make sure that you're proud of yourself in whatever you do." Her prized possession is "the friendships I have and the memories we've made." Goals in life are important and Ann's may possibly include entering politics and travel to England. She wants to "live a good life with a Mercedes Benz and Scottish terrier named 'Puppy'."

Ann's had some ups and downs during school. She describes her greatest setback: "My sophomore year, because I started to lose track of what's important." Then, on the upside, her greatest achievement is "being able to balance the different areas in my life—family, friends, school activities, and being lucky enough to have such great friends."

Ann plans to attend Marycrest College in Davenport, IA. to gain a double major of pre-law and English. Later she hopes to attend law school and pursue a career in law.

Area Student honored as "Best of the Class 1989"

High school valedictorians and top graduating seniors from Butler and 21 other Eastern Iowa counties were recently honored as "Best of the Class 1989" on KWWL-TV, Channel 7. Anastasia Nicklaus of New Hartford, was among more than 120 students featured on KWWL as "role models of excellence" for their fellow students.

According to Mark Mathis, Vice President of Programming and Operations, this marks KWWL's fourth year of recognizing Eastern Iowa's top graduating seniors. More than 600 high school students have been honored by this program to date.

"These top students represent our hope for the future," said Mathis. "And after meeting the 'Best of the Class 1989' our future looks to be in good hands."

As a part of the "Best of the Class 1989" recognition, top graduating students were invited to the University of Northern Iowa campus to be videotaped in groups and individually. The students will be featured in 60-second television announcements that will air on KWWL, Channel 7 from mid-May through June.

Students from more than 120 high schools covering all 22 Iowa counties in KWWL's service area, as well as students from Crawford and Grant counties in Wisconsin, participated in the day-long event.

CUM LAUDE (with Honors)
NEW HARTFORD: Anastasia
Nicklaus

Ann Nicklaus-Schmelzer of New Hartford receives the Archbishop Daniel W. Kucera Award. Ann is director of Holy Family Parish religious education and youth ministry.

Youth Ministry Award Presented

The Catholic Archdiocese of Dubuque recently hosted a youth rally for area high school students in Cedar Falls. Over 1,400 teens and adults from the Northeast quarter of Iowa came to celebrate their Catholic faith and to "rock" the whole day. Locally, 16 teens and adults from Holy Family Catholic Parish in Dike, Reinbeck, Grundy Center, and Parkersburg participated.

At the rally, the Archbishop Daniel W. Kucera Award is given to the adult and teen who best exemplify the values of youth ministry, who have worked tirelessly in devotion to the eight components of youth ministry (advocacy, evangelization, justice and service, leadership development, catechesis, community life, pastoral care, prayer and worship), and who have spread youth ministry throughout parish and archdiocesan levels.

The adult recipient this year was Ann Nicklaus-Schmelzer of New Hartford. Nicklaus-Schmelzer is the director religious education and youth ministry for the four Catholic parishes in Grundy and Butler Counties that were recently joined as one- "Holy Family Parish."

In his letter describing Nicklaus-Schmelzer, Greg Lievens of Aplington stated, "Other parishes in the archdiocese have been amazed at how easy it was for us to accomplish this change of uniting our four parishes. It was easy because our teens from four parishes, from over four different school districts, were already friends; the adults quickly followed their example. This was in no small part due to

"Ann's guidance and leadership in youth ministry."

Lievens went on to say "From the start, it was evident Ann was excited about enriching our children with a program which not only made them feel good about themselves, but reinforced our church's teaching. Bringing together around 50 Catholic teens every month to grow in the Catholic faith and make new friends was a giant spiritual boost and something we could never accomplish as an individual church. Ann continues to inspire our teens to put the extra effort into being a full member of our church. While many teens see her as a friend, they also respect her as their teacher and leader and know there are rules to follow."

Fr. Dennis Quint, pastor of Holy Family Parish, said, "Ann is a blessing to our parish. Her dedication, compassion, integrity and faithfulness make her a powerful witness of the gospel, especially to our young people. I am happy that her gifts have been recognized formally by others in the diocese."

Nicklaus-Schmelzer is a member of the Archdiocesan Youth Commission, a group of teens and adults that promotes youth leadership and action. She has also been involved in Teens Encounter Christ retreats, Quest retreats, Christian Leadership Institute, regional and archdiocesan youth rally planning teams, Catholics in Action justice and service retreat, National Catholic Youth Conference, and Junior High service and retreat events.

Faulty muffler blamed in two deaths

By AMY DAVIS
Courier Staff Writer

A Waterloo teen-ager and a Readlyn man died this week of accidental carbon monoxide poisoning in a van with a faulty muffler.

Myah Anne Hurd, 17, of 409 Edwards St. and Theodore Kruse Jr., 40, were found dead in the back of Kruse's conversion van at 2:20 p.m. Tuesday near Humboldt, according to the Humboldt County Sheriff's Department.

Groundskeepers at a park near Humboldt discovered the bodies while cleaning up after a motorcycle rally Hurd and Kruse had attended.

Authorities found a large hole

COURIER graphic

"the size of a fist" in the van's muffler and a handwritten note in the van stating "Remember to replace muffler in June," according to Humboldt County Attorney Kurt Stoebe.

The van's air conditioner and ignition were turned on, but the van was out of gas, he said.

"Apparently, the fumes from the muffler got inside the van," Stoebe said.

Officials said that Kruse moved the van pulling a trailer with a Harley Davidson motorcycle into the lower part of the park at 3 p.m. Monday.

"He set up a tent there," Stoebe said. "That was the last time the van was seen moving and he was seen alive."

Officials theorize that Kruse and Hurd had gone in the air-conditioned van to escape the heat.

A medical examiner estimated the time of death at 7 p.m. Monday, Stoebe said.

Kevin Krusemark, one of Hurd's friends, said he "couldn't believe it" when he heard about the girl's death.

"It's too bad because she had just graduated," he said. "Her life was just starting."

Hurd graduated in June from the Waterloo's Expo Alternative School. She was an artist who liked cats and poetry.

"She was planning on being a model, Krusemark said. "She was a very pretty young lady."

Krusemark said this was the first motorcycle rally Hurd had attended. He said Hurd and Kruse were friends and they attended the event together.

"It is quite a surprise," said Cheryl Krusemark, Kevin's sister. "She knew a lot of people. She was a very popular girl. Her personality went a long way."

Kruse has been employed at John Deere in Waterloo since July 1975, Deere officials said.

Israel Michael Hurd, 22, of 409 Edwards St., died Wednesday, Dec. 28, at Anderson Regional Medical Center in Meridian, Miss.

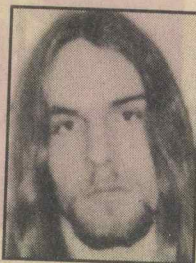

He was born Jan. 4, 1972, in Ukiah, Calif., son of Tommy LeRoy Hurd and Vivian Rae Nieman.

Survived by: his mother, Vivian Tansey of Waterloo; father and step mother, Tom and Catherine Hurd of Alden; two brothers, Shawn Powell and Troy Powell, both stationed in Virginia with the U.S. Navy; a step brother, David McKay of Cresco; a step sister, Valerie McKay of Cresco; maternal grandmother, Florence Nieman of Tripoli; and a special friend, Sarah Edwards of Meridian.

Preceded in death by: a sister, Myah Anne Hurd.

In Loving Memory

Ralph George Nieman Sr.

Like every funeral, people always think of something they should have said, and our Dad's funeral was no exception. So here is what should have been said.

Dad was born and raised on farms in Butler County and in New Hartford. He married Vivian Cook in 1943. Lynda and Richard added to the family. After being divorced in 1946 Dad married Pat Hall. Two more children, Leanna and Teddy, were added to his family. Another divorce had Dad raising three of his children with the help of his sister, Marge. In October 1955 Dad married his soul mate, Norma Jean Jaquith Rambo. They were married for almost 48 years. Norma brought Steve, Sandy, Tom and Debbie into the family. Ralph and Norma then started their own version of the movie "Yours, Mine and Ours." First Billie Jo, then Nancy, Ralph Jr., Brenda and Tim arrived to make a family of 13 children. Another generation started arriving in 1960. Now there were two grandchildren the same age as their aunt and uncle. The 13 children brought 38 grandchildren into Dad's life. Those 38 grandchildren added 51 great-grandchildren to the family.

Dad loved to tell stories of his childhood and early adult life to all who visited. He always had a joke to tell and would always laugh the hardest. We miss you, Dad, but your memory will always be with us to pass along to our grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Pat Nieman, formerly Pat Johnson, is the "lady with the long fingernails" who used to operate the elevator at Black's department store in the 1950s. She and other former store employees were invited back to the building for a "Black's Day" commemoration Thursday.

Black's building boasts bargains on memories

By PAT KINNEY
Courier Assistant City Editor

Those hands couldn't escape the glance of anyone on the elevator.

Folks old and young watched them as they worked their magic on the elevator buttons, carrying customers from one floor to the next of Black's department store.

Young kids at eye level with them were almost spellbound, as they wondered whether those hands would conjure up a floor full of toys on the other side of the elevator doors.

It wasn't really the hands specifically that attracted the attention. It was the fingernails. Long fingernails. So long you wondered how the lady could push any buttons.

Those hands, and those fingernails, belonged to Pat Nieman of New Hartford. She was Pat Johnson in the 1950s, the "lady with the fingernails" who ran the elevator at Black's.

She and about 120 other former Black's employees and customers were invited back to the defunct department store's former home, now the Chicago Central building, for a special "Black's Day" commemoration put on Thursday by Midtown Development, the partnership that owns the building.

Nieman said she originally grew the fingernails to break an old habit — and how.

"I used to bite my fingernails something terrible," she said. Until high school, that is, when she noticed other girls growing long fingernails.

"I wanted them and I thought, 'Heck, I can do the same thing with my fingernails' and I let them grow," she said.

The fingernails grew to be about two inches long by her estimation. "I went from one extreme to the other," she said.

She made a whopping 54 cents an hour working the elevator. She eventually worked her way into the control department, which kept track of daily sales and inventoried goods.

A successor of hers on the elevator, Susie Washington, did much better pay-wise in the 1960s, when she made a $1.87 an hour.

She didn't have long fingernails — at least not as long as Nieman's — but she recalls being a favorite of some service club members who met in Black's eighth floor tea room. The club members at the time were all male.

"The Rotary guys, they always wanted to get on my elevator because they liked the smell of my cologne," she said, laughing.

Another bunch of regulars, Nieman and Washington both recalled, were the ladies that would come in as soon as the store opened and sit on the mezzanine — and sit and sit.

"They thought they owned those seats," Washington said. When one went to lunch, the others would save a seat for her. They would go home at the close of business and be back the next day.

"It was a nice place for them to come," she said.

"I can't get over how different it is, though," Nieman said, looking around her former place of business. While the basement and first floor still have shops, the activity isn't the same, they said.

"We were bustling in the fifties. I don't think our elevators were ever still," Nieman said.

Donna Nelson of Midtown Development said she was surprised at the turnout for Black's Day, considering there was little advance notice.

Thursday's activities consisted mainly of touring the building — enjoying treats at Beasley's Too restaurant in what was the basement coffee shop and reminiscing in the still-impressive surroundings of the tea room, now the home of the Sky Room comedy shop.

"This was the most outstanding tea room that ever was," one man said.

Nelson said she didn't know what to expect from Black's Day. Enthused by Thursday's turnout, she said a larger schedule of activities will be planned for next year.

A former Black's employee herself, Nelson hopes former employees will contact others who didn't show and form an organization. She suggested a newsletter could be sent out.

She also invited anyone with recipes from the old Black's tea room to share them with Beasley's Too so they could be revived.

She said Midtown Development partners — including herself, her husband Vern, and Chuck Granger — want to revitalize the building as much as possible while still preserving its historical integrity.

They've attracted several new tenants — a major one being Ruppman Marketing Technologies of Peoria, Ill., which hopes to employ 100 people in the building by the year's end.

But, she said, they have decided, at some sacrifice, to preserve the first floor, the mezzanine and the eighth floor tea room, known later in Black's history as the "sky room." She noted that those areas would be the easiest to lease.

In perhaps another sign of changing times, a broken thumbnail had prompted Pat Nieman to cut her famous fingernails a few months ago.

But her hands, bedecked with all kinds of rings, still can draw attention. "I like them," she said. "It's something I started doing five years ago."

And Nelson, Midtown Development and those who worked in and remember Black's hope the downtown landmark building's business — like fingernails — can grow back again.

Linda ELLERBEE

When you are president, it's hard to remember that you're the caretaker, not the owner.

Remembering Nixon right

As I write this, Richard Nixon lies in New York Hospital in critical condition following a major stroke. By the time you read this, he may be dead, or not. Either way, there are some things to be said, starting with this: I hope he gets well. Now to other things that need saying. For two days I have listened to people on the radio and on television telling me what a swell guy Nixon was after all, what a great statesman, what a misunderstood leader.

Not.

If there's one thing we did do, it was understand Richard Nixon.

I remember the night of Aug. 8, 1974. I stood in Times Square with a television remote unit and hundreds of people, watching my network's television monitor, as the president of the United States told us he would quit the next day. It was a sad moment. But there was one thing which was clear to every single person standing in Times Square and it was this: Richard Nixon needed to quit. It was, by then, the only right thing he could do. The only thing left for him to do. We understood Nixon that night.

We understood him before that, too.

Actually, Watergate was not all that complicated. It was, at its most basic, one story. This story was played over and over in different circumstances, but it was always a story about cheating to win and lying when caught. Nixon was a man who was corrupted by his own arrogance. He really did not believe all those silly little laws applied to him, or his.

I'm told that only the old and middle-aged remember the hostility he evoked, and I believe that must be so, because today I kept hearing people say, "Oh, he was OK; it was just that he had some guys around him that were over-enthusiastic, guys who went a little too far, you know."

But that was not what happened. Nixon was not the victim of injudicious behavior of the men around him. Perhaps he knew nothing of the attempted burglary of the Democratic National headquarters before it took place, but he, Richard Nixon, president of the United States, directed the cover-up of that burglary attempt and there was an audio tape which proved it.

As for the "he was a foreign-policy giant" argument, I remember that he was also the man who authorized the secret and illegal bombing of Cambodia and the biggest campaign of organized spying on American citizens in the history of this country. Throughout his political career,

Richard Nixon skirted the edges of impropriety, from his congressional campaigns in California to his 1952 vice-presidential campaign. Power does not always corrupt but it always seduces. When you are president, it's hard to remember that you're the caretaker, not the owner. The Saturday Night Massacre, when Nixon fired the Watergate special prosecutor, reminded people who owned the place, who the landlord really was — and what the deed said.

From that moment, what counted was not the lies, the tapes or the dirty tricks, but the belief of the American people that the power of the president — any president — was no match to the power of a little piece of paper. Call it a Constitution. Call it a deed. Whatever you call it — if it was right, then Nixon was wrong.

Let us not now, from sentiment or simply too much time gone by, attempt to rewrite such an important moment in our history — important because, in the end, Watergate was not the story of the failure of a president. It was the story of the triumph of the Constitution.

Nixon remembered as statesman despite Watergate

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Richard M. Nixon, the only U.S. president to resign his office to avoid impeachment, died Friday at the age of 81, four days after suffering a major stroke that left him in a deep coma.

A spokesman said Nixon, the nation's 37th president, was pronounced dead at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, where he had been taken by ambulance Monday from his home in Park Ridge, N.J. His daughters, Julie Nixon Eisenhower and Tricia Nixon Cox were at his bedside. His wife, Pat, died last June of lung cancer.

In the last years before his death, the former president had reappeared from his self-imposed post-Watergate exile. Through his writings, his visits to Moscow and his private conversations with world leaders, he succeeded in elevating himself to a selective pantheon of statesmen.

Yet of all the men who have occupied the White House before and since, Nixon's place in history is perhaps the most ambiguous, and he stirs the most divergent of sentiments.

His name will forever be linked to what the White House dismissed as the "third-rate" burglary at the Democratic National Committee headquarters in Washington's Watergate complex — a brief episode on the night of June 17, 1972, that ultimately produced his downfall.

But Nixon's political career was remarkable for its breadth and depth. It began with a highly controversial run for Congress in 1946, when he took full advantage of fervid anti-Communist sentiment, and spanned 1 1/2 terms in the White House.

Before scandal ended his presidency, Nixon claimed a lasting achievement in the historic opening of China to the West. His success in breaking the Cold War isolation of the Asian giant won him acclaim even from liberal critics, who acknowledged that only a leader with iron-clad anti-Communist credentials could have accomplished the task.

Richard Nixon
in 1989

On domestic policy, he took unique positions for a Republican leader of his era, presenting the first proposal for a negative income tax, which would have distributed federal funds to the poorest citizens, imposing controls on wages and prices to stabilize the economy, and proposing overhauls of welfare and health care — measures that have only now returned to the top of the agenda, in the White House of a Democratic president.

But despite his successes, his career was dogged by the shadows of a darker side. He was awkward in public. He never demonstrated the ease of a successful politician, nor seemed to take any comfort from the adulation of the crowds.

On an even deeper level, he was by nature suspicious and mistrustful.

It was those qualities that allowed the burglary at the Watergate to escalate into the most stunning presidential debacle in history.

Before it ended with his resignation Aug. 9, 1974, it had ensnared not only the president but the most senior members of his White House staff, Cabinet members and the FBI, which he was accused of misusing.

Beginnings

Nixon was born Jan. 9, 1913, to a Quaker mother and a Methodist father in Yorba Linda, Calif., a small town 30 miles southeast of Los Angeles, where he spent the early years of his life before his family moved to nearby Whittier.

He graduated from Whittier College in 1934. He enrolled at Duke University Law School, where he graduated third in his class, then returned to Whittier, where he practiced trial law.

It was at a theater in Whittier that Nixon met Thelma Catherine "Pat" Ryan, the shorthand and typing teacher at the local high school. They were married in 1940.

Two years later, with World War II raging, Nixon began a four-year stint in the Navy. After the war, he returned to California and won a seat in Congress in 1946.

In Washington, the young Republican quickly gained a reputation for his zealous pursuit of Communists working in the federal government. His platform was the House Un-American Activities Committee, and his most famous case involved former State Department official Alger Hiss, who was accused of passing secrets to Soviet agents.

The publicity boosted his popularity, and he rode the wave into his 1950 campaign for the U.S. Senate. In that storied contest, Nixon branded his Democratic opponent, Helen Mary Gahagan Douglas, "the Pink Lady."

With America in the throes of anti-Communist fears, Nixon's campaign was devastating. He won by nearly 700,000 votes.

national recognition, and the ambitious young politician trained his sights on the White House. He assailed President Harry Truman as "soft on communism," and correctly surmised that Dwight Eisenhower was a rising star in the Republican Party.

Vice presidency

Nixon worked for the general's 1952 presidential candidacy and was selected as Eisenhower's vice presidential running mate at age 39.

Buoyed by a rousing reception at the Republican convention, Nixon hit the campaign trail with vigor — only to run into charges he had personally benefited from a "slush fund" established by California millionaires.

In what became known as "the Checkers speech," Nixon defended himself against the charges in a nationwide radio and television address. He detailed modest personal items belonging to him and his family, including Checkers, a spaniel an admirer had given his children.

"I don't believe that I ought to quit, because I am not a quitter," Nixon said. "But the decision, my friends, is not mine." He went on to urge the audience to wire and write the Republican National Committee with their view about whether he should be taken off the GOP ticket. The public responded with more than 2 million letters and telegrams, urging him to stay by a margin of 350-1.

In the wake of a landslide victory that fall, Nixon began serving the first of his two terms as vice president.

He was called upon to take an extensive goodwill tour of Asia in 1953, and he visited Central America in 1955 and South America in 1958. During his visit to Caracas, Venezuela, leftist mobs smashed Nixon's automobile windows and perhaps would have killed him had not Venezuelan troops arrived. For his part, Nixon earned praise for his coolness during the attack.

Nominated as his party's presidential candidate in 1960, Nixon became a victim of the same medium that had served him so well in the Checkers speech. His narrow loss to Kennedy was attributed largely to the striking difference between the two candidates in televised debates. Nixon's heavy jowls, 5 o'clock shadow and nervous manner played poorly throughout Kennedy's relaxed confidence, wit and youthful good looks.

Nixon's political fortunes continued to sink as he lost a tough California gubernatorial fight to Brown in 1962.

This time the anti-Communist tactic failed Nixon, and in defeat he accused the media of bias in covering his political career. His parting shot was: "You won't have Nixon to kick around any more, because, gentlemen, this is my last press conference."

Victory in 1968

But he came back. After joining a New York law firm in 1963, Nixon, showing party loyalty, campaigned for Barry Goldwater in his humiliating 1964 presidential race. Nixon became an effective fund-raiser and set his sights once more on the White House, winning the Republican presidential nomination in 1968 and going on to narrowly defeat Democrat Hubert Humphrey.

During his 1972 re-election campaign, Nixon appealed for a "new majority" that crossed the middle-class spectrum, but he left most campaigning to a platoon of "surrogate candidates" headed by Vice President Spiro Agnew, who resigned in disgrace in the fall of 1973 and was convicted of federal income tax evasion.

With the nation deeply divided over the Vietnam War and weary of radical and occasionally violent confrontations on college campuses, Nixon's campaign called for law and order in the United States and a strong American role overseas, and portrayed his Democratic opponent, South Dakota Sen. George McGovern, as a liberal who sympathized with college demonstrators and who would surrender America's interests abroad.

Nixon won by an overwhelming margin.

But Nixon's escalation of U.S. involvement in Vietnam ignited a firestorm of domestic protests. Later, in 1973, he tried to mute the criticism by ending the draft.

Law and order was one of Nixon's prime domestic concerns: It was foreshadowed in 1968 campaign speeches, in which he saddled the Democrats with blame for mounting crime statistics. After the election, the theme was apparent in his choice of hard-line conservative John Mitchell, his former law partner and campaign director, to be his attorney general. It was also manifest in the administration's requests for measures to strengthen the prosecution's hand in criminal cases, in the conservative trend of Nixon's judicial appointments, and in his administration's response to anti-war demonstrations.

Nixon inherited the Vietnam War from the Johnson administration. His plan was to "Vietnamize" the war by NATO asks permission to bomb positions around Gorazde as a cease-fire deadline passes.

Sarajevo, Bosnia-Herzegovina

— In a sharp dispute over the use of force in Bosnia, NATO sought to launch air strikes Saturday in response to Serb shelling of Gorazde but was blocked from doing so when the United Nations objected.

The disagreement led to an angry telephone exchange between NATO Secretary-General Manfred Wornat and Yasushi Akashi, the senior U.N. official in the former Yugoslavia.

The dispute developed on a confusing day in which the Bosnian Serbs first ignored NATO's ultimatum to stop attacking the Muslim enclave and to withdraw their troops, then appeared to pull back at least some forces.

The NATO ultimatum, issued Friday, had threatened air strikes unless Serbs immediately stopped shelling Gorazde, a U.N.-declared "safe area" in Bosnia where a three-week Serb assault has reduced most buildings to rubble and left thousands dead or wounded.

NEW YORK TIMES

Washington, D.C. — Paying tribute to Richard Nixon on the day after his death at the age of 81, American and world leaders Saturday emphasized the 37th president's epochal achievements in reconciling the United States with communist powers, rather than the ignominy of his resignation from office.

A fierce and glowering anti-communist early in his career as a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Nixon as president began to wind down the Cold War with his opening to communist China and the negotiation of the first nuclear arms-control treaty with Moscow.

Then, from the shadows of old age, 15 years after Watergate, he watched the Soviet empire crumble.

Saturday morning President Clinton issued a proclamation declaring a national day of mourning Wednesday, when Nixon's funeral is to be held in his home town, Yorba Linda, Calif. Clinton urged all Americans "to assemble on that day in their respective places of worship to pay homage" to the former president.

CEDAR RAPIDS

The men and women of the Army Reserve's 445th Transportation Company never made it to a war zone. They spent six months at their Fort Dix mobilization station in New Jersey, waiting.

To their families, it didn't matter where they were; they weren't home.

But on Saturday, 35 civilian soldiers out of Waterloo and Iowa City finally returned to their families with a welcome home ceremony at the U.S. Army Reserve Center in Cedar Rapids.

The day Staff Sgt. Jeff Noble left was "awful," said Mindy, his wife. "It was the worst thing ever."

Seeing him off was almost like attending a funeral, she said.

home to an empty house," she said. "I honestly believe the only ones who relate are those who've been through it."

Noble sat with other waiting spouses Shannon Hotchkiss, of Cedar Rapids, and Patti Hagen, of Allison. All three returning soldiers are fathers, and Hagen had her children with her, waiting anxiously for their father, Warren, to arrive.

"He's like a hero to them," she said.

Spouses relieved, soldiers were never sent to Iraq

The women expressed relief their spouses never saw any real action, but knew their husbands were somewhat disappointed.

"They were ready. They were trained. It's what they were waiting for," said Hagen.

Lt. Col. Lloyd Plume understood why the return for the soldiers could potentially be bittersweet, but he didn't believe any of them should be disappointed.

"All answered the query and call. We move and go do jobs our planners and leaders have for us," he said. "Sure, there's always some anticlimactic response of, 'Oh, I didn't get to go to the big show,' but every unit has a mission. Nothing should be wasted."

According to Plume, the intent was for the soldiers of the unit to deploy to a location — not necessarily Iraq — and fulfill a mission, but operations went so quickly the need for their services disappeared.

What the unit did is called cross-leveling. When a unit is short people, it looks for other units with similar specialties and pulls soldiers from there. Though the local soldiers didn't go overseas, their mission was no less important, said Plume. And they did more than just serve as replacement soldiers.

Though they never deployed, the men did mobilize, he said, learning individual, team and unit-level skills and becoming trained up to mission standards.

"They were able to work with people from other units from the United States and cohere into an operational, effective force," he said.

In a speech welcoming the soldiers home, Col. David McAlpin thanked them for their service and said, "We wouldn't be the country we are today without citizen soldiers like yourselves willing to serve."

Maj. Gen. Michael Symanski deemed the soldiers "irreplaceable," reminding them their homecoming was most likely a once-in-a-lifetime event.

He reminded the crowd, "We may be welcoming these soldiers home, but we're still deploying others."

After waiting for six months and through an hour-long ceremony, Mindy and Jeff Noble greeted each other with a hug and a kiss.

Sliding her arm around his waist, Mindy said to her husband, "Let's go home."

training and equipping South Vietnamese troops for an ever-larger role in the conflict. But in fact massive U.S. involvement continued, leading to new crises and further flare-ups of anti-war demonstrations when the United States and South Vietnam struck at Viet Cong sanctuaries in Cambodia in 1970 and 1971.

Throughout much of his tenure, Nixon was plagued by a troubled national economy. The Republican president tried a series of economic remedies, including a 90-day freeze on all wages and prices in 1971, with any increases subject to approval of a Cost of Living Council. Nixon also persuaded Congress to change the Post Office Department into the quasi-private agency it is today.

Although Nixon generally ignored minorities and the poor, developing few programs targeting them, he did attempt in 1969 to overhaul the welfare system through a guaranteed annual income, thereby departing dramatically from Republican tenets. But the plan, created by Nixon aide Daniel Patrick Moynihan, now a U.S. senator from New York, was scrapped the next year as congressional liberals and Southern Democrats opposed it.

While many believe his record on domestic issues was mixed, Nixon's foreign policy achievements were more apparent.

In May 1972, the one-time "red-baiter" visited Moscow. Despite their differences over Vietnam, Nixon and Soviet leaders signed agreements to limit both offensive and defensive strategic weapons.

Nixon's principal coup was the resumption of relations with Communist China, spotlighted by his trip there in February 1972. It was a political image maker's dream: the hard-line anti-Communist visiting the world's most populous Communist country.

Nixon also travelled to Egypt in June 1974 — even as the curtain was rising on the last act of the Watergate drama. He made the trip as part of a Middle East tour that also took him to Saudi Arabia, Israel, Syria and Jordan.

But by then, Nixon was a president disgraced.

Watergate

Nixon's second term was harrowed by scandal: First, the vice president's disgrace, and more and more the Watergate break-in at the Democratic headquarters during the re-election campaign.

Tenuous links to the White House were made soon after the break-in, when some of the burglars — who were caught by a security guard — were found to have White House telephone numbers in their possession.

The episode was initially dismissed by the White House as a "third-rate burglary" unauthorized by anyone of rank.

But over the next two years, inquiries pressed first by a judge and the press, then by Congress and special prosecutors, unraveled a web of political crimes: "hush money" paid to the burglars, other efforts to block investigators, wiretaps of "White House enemies," campaign "dirty tricks" and more.

As public disclosures brought responsibility for the cover-up closer and closer to the White House, Nixon's top lieutenants toppled like dominos. Attorney General John Mitchell, who had been Nixon's campaign director, resigned. H.R. "Bob" Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, his closest White House aides, followed.

A Senate committee investigated Watergate on national television in the spring and summer of 1973 and learned that a secret taping system had recorded all of Nixon's White House conversations. The evidence from those tapes proved to be some of the most damning against the president.

When a grand jury indicted Mitchell, Haldeman, Ehrlichman and four others for allegedly covering up the Watergate break-in, Nixon was named as an undicted co-conspirator.

In July 1974, the House Judiciary Committee approved three articles of impeachment, charging Nixon with obstructing justice, misusing his presidential power and defying committee subpoenas. But before the full House could consider the impeachment articles, Nixon resigned Aug. 9.

"If some of my judgments were wrong, and some were wrong, they were made in what I believed to be the best of interests of the nation," Nixon said as he announced his resignation. He admitted no culpability.

A month after his resignation, Nixon's successor, Gerald Ford, issued a pardon for all crimes that Nixon "committed or may have committed or taken part in," during his presidency.

Jeff Noble Called To Duty

With talks of war with Iraq looming, it only seemed a matter of time before some of our local reserves were called up to active duty.

Such was the case for Jeff Noble, age 40, of Aplington. Jeff was originally called up a couple of weeks ago but those plans were scrapped till now. Jeff flew out of Cedar Rapids Saturday to venture to New Jersey.

"There is not a whole lot I can tell anyone" commented Noble. "I was not too nervous at first, but after the meeting we had today (Thursday) with the rest of my company and the nearer it gets, I sure am now". "I won't find out any more till we get to New Jersey on Saturday" Noble added.

Jeff is a member of the Army Reserve #445 Transportation Company. He couldn't comment on how many of his company were called up.

The City of Aplington held a "send-off" celebration for Jeff last Thursday afternoon and his friends and family showed up to give him their best wishes. Jeff works for the maintenance department of the Aplington City.

 Pat is gone this week (January 26th) so I will bring you a few topics via "Across Butler County".

Winter is settling in again so we may have to change our beef cow nutrition programs. Corn stalks and open grazing have been wonderful this Fall and Winter, but with most stalk fields pretty well gleaned and our cows getting closer to dropping their calves it is time to adjust rations.

Typically, the average cow-calf manager overfeeds his cows! It is always dangerous to make generalizations like that. Pregnant beef cows in the last third of gestation will do very well on average quality oat hay, salt and di-cal feed free choice. Unfortunately, oat hay at $75.00/ton will cost you about $1.20 per cow per day as her main feed. That's very high!

Depending on what forages you have available, we can reduce that feed cost by using corn stalk bales, corn silage or other low cost forages. As an example, I could feed 26 lbs. of corn stalks, 9 lbs. of alfalfa-brome hay, and a 12:8 Ca:P ratio mineral mix plus a salt block for about $.69 a day (corn stalks of $30/ton, hay at $65/ton and the mineral at $275/ton). This will meet the nutrient requirements of a mature British breed cow up until 45 days before calving.

EDWIN L. NORTON

In the family were three daughters and four sons born of the first marriage: Ann, who became the wife of Frank Stevens and is now a widow living in Shabbona, Illinois; Melissa, who became the wife of John Smith and died in Oregon in 1910; Laura, who became the wife of Alby (Mose) Robinson and died in this county; Edwin L.; Byron and William, who enlisted in Missouri for service in the Civil war, the former being killed in battle, while the latter was mortally wounded in a conflict and died a few days after reaching home; and Le Roy, who has been superintendent of schools during the greater part of his life and now makes his home in Michigan. There were also seven children born of the father's second marriage.

Edwin L. Norton was a youth of about fourteen years at the time of his mother's death and in 1854, when sixteen years of age, he came with his father to Butler county, where he has since lived with the exception of a few months spent in Kansas. He has always followed farming and now owns about four hundred acres of rich and valuable land. His home is situated on section 32, Shell Rock township and he has two hundred and forty acres on sections 5 and 6, Beaver township. The two farms are only about a half mile apart. The purpose to which the home place is largely devoted has given to it the name of the Oak Ridge Stock Farm, for here Mr. Norton raises high-grade stock, including cattle, horses and hogs. His political support is given to the republican party and he keeps well informed on the questions and issues of the day but does not seek nor desire office, having always preferred to concentrate his energies upon his business affairs which, capably managed, have brought to him success.

In 1861 Mr. Norton was married to Miss Mary M. Waters, who was born in Cortland county, New York, in 1844, her parents being Servetus and Mercy (Helm) Waters, natives of Connecticut and New York respectively. They removed to De Kalb county, Illinois, when Mrs. Norton was ten years of age and in 1858 came to this county, where both passed away when well advanced in years. The father died in 1892 in his ninetieth year and the mother when eighty-four years of age. They were the parents of seven children: Amos, who died in Oregon; Abner, who died in Denver, Colorado; Alzina, who became the wife of John Robins and died in this county; Elnora, who became the wife of Olen Stevens and both died in Illinois; Joseph, of Seattle, Washington; Julius, who was killed at the battle of Pleasant Hill while serving in the Civil war; and Mrs. Norton.

has added from time to time until he now owns two hundred acres. He raises hay, corn and oats and is also interested in stock breeding, keeping twenty-five head of cattle, sixty hogs and eight horses.

In Washington township, on the 1st of April, 1895, Mr. Frey was united in marriage to Miss Gertie Van Loh, a daughter of George Van Loh, a farmer, who passed away at the age of twenty-four years. Mr. Frey is independent in his political views and has served as township trustee and president of the school board. He is numbered among the representative citizens, devotes considerable of his time to gospel ministry and kindred work and has the esteem and confidence of an extensive circle of friends.

EDWIN L. NORTON.

For almost sixty years Edwin L. Norton has been a resident of Butler county and is one of its extensive landowners. His home place, known as the Oak Ridge Stock Farm, is located at Nortons Corners on section 32, Shell Rock township, and there he engages in raising high-grade stock, including horses, cattle and hogs. He has now traveled life's journey for seventy-five years and as one of the pioneer settlers of this locality, his memory forms a connecting link between the primitive past and the progressive present.

A native of Ohio, he was born in Cuyahoga county, on the 15th of August, 1838, and is a son of Lyman and Hannah (Gates) Norton, who were also natives of the Buckeye state. In 1842 they removed to De Kalb county, Illinois, and in the fall of 1854 the father arrived in Butler county, Iowa, settling in the district which became known as Nortons Corners in Shell Rock township. There he resided until 1862, when he went to Missouri, but after a short time returned to De Kalb county, Illinois, where his last days were spent, reaching the venerable age of eighty-four years. The mother also died in De Kalb county, but before the family removed to Iowa. The father afterward married again and his second wife died in De Kalb county. Lyman Norton was a farmer and also worked at the carpenter's trade to some extent. In antebellum days he was a strong opponent of slavery and when the republican party was formed to prevent its further extension, he became one of its strong advocates.

Four children were born unto Mr. and Mrs. Norton: Florence became the wife of M. G. Parks and died at the age of twenty-two years, leaving a daughter, Blanche, who is now the wife of Milton Willey, of Shell Rock township, by whom she has three children: Margaret; and twins, born in December, 1913. Byron, the second member of the Norton family, resides upon and operates the home farm. He married Eva Church, who was born September 3, 1873, and died May 5, 1910. They became the parents of seven children: Earl, Madge, Lois, Ruth, Vera, and Harry and Howard, twins. Estella Norton, the third member of the family, became the wife of M. G. Parks of Albion township and they have three children: Leland, Edith and Harland. Maude, the fourth member of the family, is the wife of Clyde Bolton, living on her father's farm in Beaver township, and they have one son, Wayne.

No history of this county would be complete without mention of Edwin L. Norton, so long has he resided in this district. There were few white settlers living in Butler county at the time of his arrival and the Indians were still numerous in some sections. Land was largely unclaimed and uncultivated but the soil was naturally rich and productive and offered excellent opportunities to the farmer. Mr. Norton has lived to witness all the changes which have since occurred—changes wrought by time and man, and he can relate many interesting incidents concerning the history of the county from pioneer times to the present.

THOMAS H. McCARTY.

Thomas H. McCarty, engaged in general farming, dairying and stock-raising upon three hundred acres of excellent land on sections 11 and 12, Beaver township, was born in Ireland, June 14, 1858. He is a son of Thomas and Bridget (Deonje) McCarty, also natives of the Emerald isle, the former born in 1821. The parents came to America in 1855 and settled in Bremer county, where the father passed away. His wife afterward moved to Beaver township, this county, where her death occurred in 1898. She and her husband had eight children, of whom the subject of this review is the only one surviving.

Thomas H. McCarty acquired his education in the public schools of Beaver township, attending until he was fifteen years of age. He afterward worked upon the farm and in 1898, when
