

A black and white photograph of a small, white, single-story building with horizontal siding. The building has a steep gabled roof. On the right side of the front facade, the words "CASS COUNTY GAME CONSERVATION CLUB" are painted in large, bold, black capital letters, with "INC." in smaller letters below. The building features a central double door with a small set of steps and a dark vertical trim piece on either side. To the left of the door are two arched windows. A tall, thin chimney is visible on the left side of the building. A large bush is planted in front of the right side of the building. The building sits on a grassy field. In the background, there is a utility pole on the right and a bare tree on the left.
