

I had the privilege last week of visiting with seven charming young women who would not change their way of life for any other. They were the conservation queen candidates and as they talked about their farm homes and life in the country I began to feel that perhaps I had missed something.

Pretty and intelligent. these girls know that soil conservation vitally affects them and future generations and they are interested in conservation practices on their own farms as well as on others.

It is extremely gratifying to hear young ladies express a love of their farm life and for the outdoors. The thought came to me that I hoped our town young people have the same loyalty for their communities and that they are equally as concerned over its future.

The girls with whom we lunched were Sharon Hagen, New Providence; Rita Kadolph, Owasa; Mary K. Mitterer, Iowa Falls; Mary Ruth Moore, Iowa Falls; Joy Elaine Norman, Clemons; Patricia Ann Thayer, Alden, and Patty Winters, New Providence.
